If you haven’t gone a little wacky in recent years it’s probably high time you did.

I suppose there are those who would say don’t encourage the guy who bass fishes to get any more wacky than he is already. It’s not the behavior of that bassin’ man with the rod in his hand I’m talking about. What I have in mind are the different approaches to bass angling that employ a Wacky Style presentation to put fish in the boat.

If you do decide to rig Wacky Style is it best to just run your hook through the worm as has been done here? Sliding a ring or band snugly aound the belly of the bait and running your hook under it lets you avoid actually penetrating the Senko with your hook.

Some expert anglers favor using rubber bands around the middle of a Senko when they rig Wacky Style. The rubber bands are available in different colors. Sometimes adding a slight color change can result in more hits.

Split rings provide you another means of rigging your Senkos Wacky Style. The rings add a bit of weight that tends to slightly vary the action you'll get as the Senko drops through the water.
